

Dr. Fardad Doroudi (1967) graduated in Medicine and Public Health from Iran and Tehran Universities of Medical Sciences. He continued his studies in the field of clinical trials with an emphasis on community-based interventions as well as leadership and management in health in Canada.

Among his writings are: Haemoglobin disorders management (1997), blood diseases (1396), Guidelines for development of research proposals (1995) and training manuals in the area of results-based management, and quality management.

He has implemented numerous research projects in the field of reproductive health, security and management of food, HIV and AIDS, and Public Health.

Dr. Doroudi has contributed to several conferences and workshops by giving lectures and presentations in the field of epidemiology, monitoring and evaluation, decision making, conflict management, negotiation, change management, and issues related to health policy and public diplomacy.

He has joined UN in 1999 and has worked in various capacities in the following UN Agencies: UNFPA, WFP, UNDP, and GFATM. He is the Country Director of UNAIDS (Joint United Nations Programme on AIDS) since 2009.